ENTOMOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF ONTARIO

VOLUME 138

2007

You will notice that there are two Editors' Forwards in this volume of the Journal of the Entomological Society of Ontario. On page 2 is the forward from Special Editor Steve Marshall that was originally printed in Volume 137, which I have been thinking of as 'Pengelly I', with the first five papers in this volume comprising 'Pengelly II'. About two years ago, we began planning a special volume in memory of David Pengelly, an entomologist at the University of Guelph who inspired many Ontario and Canadian entomologists. It is a mark of the esteem in which his students and colleagues held him, that the memorial volume had to be split into two. I would like to express my warmest thanks and appreciate to Steve Marshall who acted as the Special Editor of the Pengelly volumes.

With the publication of Volume 138, I am delighted to note that JESO has resumed a timely publication schedule. Not only is the 2007 volume actually being published in 2007, but preparations are already underway for Volume 139, to be published in 2008. Another important change is electronic distribution of published manuscripts, with the added attraction that the electronic versions may include colour plates and maps, which are generally impossibly expensive to print. Electronic distribution will enable our authors' work to reach the wider audience that it deserves, not least of all because it will become accessible to web search engines. These are important developments in bringing JESO to a wider audience, and everyone who has helped to get us to this point, should award herself or himself a pat or two on the back. I especially thank the JESO Editorial Board, the ESO Board, our patient Technical Editor, and the many reviewers whose hard work and enthusiasm for the Journal, have been the real impetus for these changes.

After that moment of self-congratulation, let me assure you that we are not resting on our laurels, but intend to continue building on the momentum we have established. First, we are committed to maintaining annual publication in the autumn of each year (dare we dream of bi-annual publication?), so please submit your work to JESO – we are already considering manuscripts for Volume 139 (2008), and the more, the merrier. Remember, all entomological research is welcome, whether its subjects are in Ontario or elsewhere. Second, we are planning to begin converting back volumes of JESO into electronic format for distribution from the website – eventually we would like to post all volumes of JESO and its predecessor, the Proceedings of the ESO, right back to volume 1. Third, the success of these Pengelly volumes has inspired suggestions for future special volumes devoted to particular entomological themes. All these plans will help to ensure a bright and buggy future for the Journal.

Happy reading!
